Trauma & Core Wound (Ghost)

Maryanne's defining trauma is the unresolved death of her parents. When Angela Cartwright was twelve, her parents—Alex and Belinda Cartwright—were killed in a vehicle collision. Though officially ruled accidental, forensic indicators suggested foul play that was never substantiated. That uncertainty replaced grief with purpose.

Angela did not mourn. She searched.

This unanswered question became the axis of her life and the reason she could never walk away from injustice.

---

Mars Mission & Transformation

Under the cover identity Stephanie Brewster, Angela was embedded within NanTech Industries as a biomedical research analyst, assigned to the Mars expedition (2033–2035). The mission was framed as low-risk surveillance of Christopher Phillips, heir to the Phillips legacy and CEO of NanTech. On Mars, Angela uncovered something unprecedented:

- A hidden excavation beneath the NanTech facility
- An alien structure carved into ancient lava tubes

- Scientists dissolving into black pools, destroyed from within

The technology was alien, ancient and lethal.

The Choice

Realising that the alien nanites and their codex could not be allowed to fall into Christopher Phillips's hands, Angela made a deliberate sacrifice.

She injected herself with the nanites, encoding the alien knowledge within her own biology. The nanites rewrote her cellular processes, mimicking aggressive lymphoma by hijacking ribosomes, RNA, and protein synthesis.

She saved humanity.

At the cost of her life.

Exile, Death & Preservation

Returning to Earth, Angela discovered that even the CIA had been compromised. With the help of Jason Robinson, her closest ally and eventual rescuer, her death was falsified in 2036 to throw Christopher Phillips off her trail. Over the following years:

- Angela and Jason fought in obscurity
- NanTech exploded in global power
- Christopher Phillips rose among the global elite

By 2043, Angela was dying. When Christopher finally captured her, he chose cruelty over closure—cryopreserving her alive to extract the alien secrets at his leisure, forcing Jason to witness the act.

Jason Robinson & Legacy

Jason later escaped and, after years of planning, stole Angela's cryo-pod in a daring daylight operation. He concealed her in a hidden vault beneath his estate, maintaining her autonomously under the new identity Maryanne Kendricks. Unable to revive her, Jason ensured one thing instead: She would be found when the time was right.

Reanimation & Present Function

Maryanne's reanimation in 2169 is a rupture, not a restoration.

She awakens:

- Without memories
- Carrying alien nanites
- Physiologically weakened
- Psychologically unmoored

Yet her core remains intact.

Her instinct is still to question, to protect, to do good.

---

Motivation

- Surface Motivation:
Discover who she really was.
  - Deeper Motivation:
Discover who she was in order to understand how to do good in the world now.

Goal

Reclaim identity without losing innocence; uncover the truth behind her past and its connection to the present-day threat.

---

Hidden Agenda

Though conscious memory is gone, Maryanne is still driven by an unresolved need for justice—particularly surrounding her parents' deaths and the Phillips legacy.

Epiphany (Part One: Awakening)

The answers to her condition, the nanites within her, and the forces now reshaping the world lie on Mars—where her life was first broken.

Narrative Role

Maryanne Kendricks is the moral centre and living legacy of Cryonic Dreams. Where Michelle Brown represents resistance through control and intellect, Maryanne embodies sacrifice, memory, and the danger of forgotten truth.

She is not merely resurrected.

She is a warning—
and a second chance.
